he thought the object of its framers was to commit the lords to some uiterior design. This was no plan of disendowment, but the framers threatened that if it were not passed worse would follow. If a worse one could be framed they would have done it. He conceived of nothing worse than abolition. Inquiry should be made as to the right of spoilation. If envy and dislike were the reason for it, it would not stop at corporate property. He thought the Fenians would regard it as a sop to save the land. Land, and not the Church, was their object and the real badge of conquest. If the Lords became an echo of the Commons they had better not be Lords at all. He wished to yield to the opinion of the people, but if they acted prudently, firmly and independently they would probably interpret the wish of the people better than the Commons have done.

The debate was then adjourned.

Romero has been ordered back from Washington. In a communication to the English bondholders, under date of May 20, he says that the intervention annulled all treaties, and all obligations were compromised by the negotiations with the agents of the intervention and Maximilian's government. RISTORI'S FAREWELL.

French Theatr -Last Appearance of Ristori.
Yesterday Ristori made her last appearance before an American audience. The new many frames an American audience. The play was the tragedy of "Elizabeth." It was the last matines—the last of an American audience. The play was the tragedy of "Elizabeth." It was the last matines—the last of those exquisite days that have been such rare treats in the round of dramatic delights—the last of that itururious Italian tongue in our theatres for many a day—the last of a grand dramas are few, and the last of an actress whose greatness, devotion to art, classical accuracy and sympathetic power have lifted her above the cavil even of quidnunes. The audience—one of oritical taste and outture—appreciated with peculiar zest the refined pleasure that was not to be enjoyed again, and Ristori presented more vividly than ever the very nature of the brusque, passionate, capricious queen. Elizabeth is, no doubt, the character in which the public memory will idealize Ristori, and it is well that she should leave it last in our thoughts. It is a character most in the vein in which the great artist feels her force—the intense expression of natural impulses. There is the necessary light and shade for striking effect. The story of Elizabeth also is more poetically just, and it meels that great canon of art that, however it arouses and thrills, it never shocks us. This is not the case with Mary Antoinette, which is too full of horror and more distressing than an execution. With all its gorgeous effects it falls in the true sense, because it goes too far and puts us on the rack, while the sequence of events in Elizabeth only anticipates our common sense of justice at every change. This is, perhaps, the reason why Ristori is altined her first great impression. Perhaps it was her consciousness of this that induced her to linger a mother day on the stage that she might leave the name of Elizabeth as the latest echo of her fame among a people with whom her primary thought has been, is the words of Dante, "Tissuo m'e belle, quanto a te place."

At the end of the fourth act, receiving an enthusiant round of applause, Ristori responded by coming forward to the foolights and delivering in English the foliowing quatrain:—

The end has come; the last word must be spoken From great and free America I part. But never, never can the spell be broken; Her memory I take and leave my heart! This was given with an emphasis so just and an accent and sentiment so happily consonant to the occasion as to dignify and give point to the verses.

Presentation to Mme. Ristori. The American Dramatic Fund Association on Monday evening presented Mme. Ristori, as a token photographic album, quarto volume, containing 200 cartes de visite of the members of the association and many other persons with whom she had become acquainted in this city. The book is bound in embossed Russia teather, richly ornamented with clasps, plates and guards of solid gold. On its front is the following inscription:—

MADAME ADELAIDE RISTORI, OF ESTEEM AND GRATITUDE,

OF ESTEEM AND GRATITUDE, FROM THE AMERICAN DRAMATIC FUND ASSOCIATION, JUNE 25, 1868.

On the corners of the oblong space surrounding the plate four smaller plates, made in shapes to harmonize with the design of the cover, bear the names:—Medea, Macbeth, Myrcha and Elizabeth. The other cover is similarly ornamented, but has in place of the inscription plate Mme. Ristori's monogram, surmounted by her coronet, and the names on the four corner plates are Marie Stuart, Marie Antoinette, Bor Teresa and Gindetta.

The book was presented to Mme. Ristori by Mr. John Brougham, the president of the association, and was accompanied by a letter highly eulogistic of the genius of the great artiste.

BOOK NOTICES.

BURNS' PORTICAL WORKS. Diamond Edition. Lippin-cott, Philadelphia. CAMPBELL'S PORMS. Appleton, New York.

Burns and Campbell require no praise at our or any hands. The diamond edition of the former, just any hands. The diamond edition of the former, just issued from the press of the Mesars. Lippincott, of Philadelphia, is one of the handiest, most readable pocket editions of Burns which we have seen. When we say that it is got up in the same style with, and that it is possessed of all the excellences of, the diamond Tennyson, &c., of Ticknor & Fields, we give it sufficient recommendation. We regret that we cannot say so much for the Mesars, Appletons' new edition of Campbell's works. The paper is good, but the plates are evidently much worn. We recommend them to issue a diamond Campbell, and retain the illustrations which adorn the edition now before us. It would be a useful as well as an elegant volume. Defaced type is never agreeable. It is especially offensive in a volume of poetry.

On the contrary, he is the only "left hand" man of the nine. It gives the other players each due credit for his career and abilities, and says of Shafer, Cuthbert and Sensenderfer that they fill the outfield as it is filled by no other three players in America. We wonder if the writer ever saw the Stars, of Brooklyn, in the field. Rogers and Worth can stand with any two men in America in the outfield.

The Central City Club of Syracuse deny the allegation made by some of the Troy papers to the effect that they had refused without cause to play the return with the "Haymakers" within the fifteen days prescribed by law. They claim that it was mutually agreed upon to defer the return game until after July 4, and that when the subsequent challenge was received they declined to forego the agreement previously made.

One of the best jokes of the season was perpetrated on Monday last. A party of lively youths from Williamsburg were the perpetrators, and a party of Jensey elders the victims. They wents expecting to meet a party of nestlings like themselves, but to their surprise they were met at the landing by a party of full fielded fall swingers, who were in turn asionished by the audacity of the youths. But the youngsters had come so far they though that it would be but fair to let them enjoy themselves a white, and a game was made up and played, and the plucky lads stepped so quickly around that they clipped the Ragles' wings and came off with the following score:—

The Eckfords and Orientals, of New York, played yesterday at the Union grounds, and after a rather tame display of three hours' duration the game closed in favor of the Eckfords with a score of 33 to 16. THE LOSS OF THE MORNING STAR and Thrilling Particulars. The following is a corrected version of the statement Morning Star, so far as relates to the melancholy fate of the Misses Patchin:-

I was asleep at the time of the codission: got up immediately and dressed. Went to my door, and as sleeped out the Misses Patchin were at their door, and asked me, "what is the matter?" "I replied I do not know, but think we have rangiown a schooner," and that I hoped it was nothing serious to our short and that I hoped it was nothing serious to our short and that I would go and find out and tell them at once. I then went out of the catcher, and saw the Courtland just clear of the boxs of the Star. Went down to the engine room and asked Watson what was the matter, &c., as you have stated it; went forward and looked down into the forecastle, but saw no water. Then went up stairs and took the Misses Patchin and others that as near as I could learn we were all right, but would keep watch, and if anything was wrong would let them know at once, went again out of the cabin door and looked for the Courtland, and as I went forward and saw try the state of the star of the state of the state of the state of the state of the star, Heard a man cail out from the Courtland, "Are you sinking?" A roply was made from our pilot house, which I could not understand; then the same voice called out, "If you ain't going to sink I want to come aboard, for we shall go down in twenty minutes." The reply was, "The water won't come up to the top of your spars; hang on and you will be all right." I then wont down to the engine room a second time and said to Watson, "I so the water won't come up to the top of your spars; hang on and you will be all right." I then wont down to the engine room a second time and said to Watson, "I so the simple room a second time and said to Watson," I so the simple room a second time and said to Watson, "I so the simple room a second time and said to Watson, or so the said." I did not see the bost again, but heard her go under within a fow accounts from the time I rose to the surface. Neither hysolf nor the ladies near me were drawn down by the load, but we were whirled rapidly round by the eddies. So far as I saw after the eddies had ceased the persons in the water still held their life preservers, but some were out of place, being drawn round over the wearer's back or shoulders. The elder Miss Patchin, or a tady I supposed to be her from the color of her dress, was assisted by some man near her to a box, which I think she grasped with her hands. The younger one, or a hady I supposed to be ben in a black dress (it was too dark to recognize counte-mances easily, especially of persons nearly strangers), was very near me and I helped her to replace one of her life preservers under her arm. She spoke severat times about her sister, wished she was with her sister, and such expressions, during the first fifteen minutes. A cabin door floated near us about half an hour siter we went into the water. In the meantime the water, which was at first very comfortable, had become intensely cold, and when this door was placed partly under her, her head and right arm being well up on it, she did not appear to be able to grasp it, and laid quite still on it, but with her head out of the water. Soon a severe squall'came up, and in the rain I was separated from the rest of the survivors and was not within seeing distance of any one again until daylight.

This is the story of what I saw in connection with the wreck of the Morning Star so far as other persons than myself are concerned.

It is painfully clear from the account of Mr. Chase that the sisters were denied the dask sad privilege of perishing together.

ON A SAD QUEST.

The Cieveland Revald of Tuesday evening says that "ar. A. Darwin Patchin, brother of the young ladies lost on the Morning Star, and Mr. Thadeleus Patchin, a cousin, arrived from Buffaloby the Monday morning train, and proceeded on immediately up the lake shore, hoping to gain tidings relative to their, triends. The brother was with his sisters at the wedding; in this city, and parted with them on Thursday evening, returning to Buffalo, and leaving them to pursue their trip further West. Of course words cannot express the grief he suffered by this terrible ending of what was so joyful a visit."

Mr. Darwin Patchin is also mentioned as one of a party on a tug searching for the remains of the lost.

FIRES LAST NIGHT.

Extensive Fire in Fulton Street

At about a quarter of two o'clock this morning re broke out in the store of the Empire Ten and Coffee Company, 205 Pulton street. The fire at first spread through the store from the rear to the front. back, and the fire then started up the rear of the building, and at the time of going to press there seemed to be strong indications that the whole of the building would be destroyed. that the whole of the building would be destroyed. The basement was occupied by the Excelsior Restaurant. The third story of the building was occupied by Charles Forrest, engraver. There were one or two other occupants whose names could not be accertained. The building was five stories, and was valued at about $50,000. The loss on the stock of the Empire Tea Company may be estimated at about $30,000.

Fire to King Street-Loss About Thirty

Thousand Dollars.

About one o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the top floor of the five story brick buildings 73 and 75 King street, occupied by Bruner & Moore, manufacturers of furniture. The firemen were remarkably quick at the premises and just as quickly at work, and by this prompt action succeeded in confining the fire to the top floor and roof. The actua damage done to the top hoor and root. The actual damage done to the building will not exceed $20,000, but the damage done to the furniture by water will be heavy, and is estimated at about $2,000. No doubt the loss is fully covered by insurance. The top hoors it seems are used for varnishing furniture, and the fire is believed to have originated from spontaneous combustion.

About half-past ten o'clock last night a fire broke out in the three story brick building No. 427 Wes Fifty-fourth street. The first floor was occupied as a lager beer saloon and the second and third as a match factory. Loss on the stock $1,500; on fixtures and building $3,000. Fully insured in fire compa-nies. Building owned and occupied by John Loehr.

A VERITABLE BULL IN A VERITABLE CHINA SHOP. (From the Evening Telegram, June 26.)

rom time immemorial the phrase "a bull in a na shop" has been regarded less as a conception to be realized than as a figure of speech to convey an result from the presence of an unwieldly and unreasoning force in the midst of a fragile and indefensive element. Few have ever seen a built in a china shop, but all can appreciate what is likely to follow from such an alarming entree. The ille is readily recognized when we look at simile is readily recognized when we look at the bovine party that has managed to get into the government shop, and, with that tremendous buil at their head, Ben Butler, are smashing up the china it cost this American people so much to collect. In this instance no simile could be more perfect, and probably for such contingencies the designers of such phrases wisely provided. This morning, how-ever, we are enabled to record the rare instance of a veritable buth in a vertiable china shop, and no mean china shop either, but one where a convergence but mendacious buil could destroy the aggregate work of a lifetime.

Before noon to-day a great antiered bovine, finding the time hanging heavily on his lands, stroffed lessurely and modestly by the side door on Broome street into the store of E. V. Haughwout, on Broadway and Broome street. It was early, and the visit being as unexpected as it was momentous, there was no one in the immediate neighborhood who adequately realized its nature and importance. However, when it had been noticed by somebody industriously cleaning the glass cases, no battery of artiflery planted in the doorway preparing to shell the whole concern could have conveyed any more appalling impression. In went the bull between rows of brillent glass cases, in which the most expensive of Bohemian vases were contained, and, turning to the right made his way to a magnificent mirror. Thanks to that mirror, the establishment was saved. Overcome by his vanity, that wretched bull stood stupidly admirring himself when his time should have been occupied in making acquaintance with the china and enjoying a good time generally. He well deserves never to get a similar chance again. Two bipeds stole noiselessily behind him, and while he was utterly lost admiring the sharp tip on his horns took him quietly by the tall and drew him gently back. Then with the ulmost facility they wheeled him around and showed him to the door with a success the most marvellous that has ever been heard of. Incredible to relate, not an article was disturbed, and that doubly stupid bull will have to pass his days in vain remorse for the opportunity he so withuly let pass. Before noon to-day a great antiered bovine, finding

The direct straw comes from gave these hats a great reputation, and they soom fetched high prices. The dnest straw comes from the neighborhood of Signa, a small place not far from Florence. The country people plait the straw and put it together at home, and the hats in their rough state are then sent to a manufactory to be duished. A smooth surface is first given to them; they are then steeped in a weak solution of sectate of lead, after which they are ironed and pressed. There are fifty-six such establishments in Tuscany-one at Florence, two at Pestora, three at Prato, four-teen in the neighborhood of Campl, soven a Empolt and Brozzi, four at Signa, &c. The varies of the average annual exportation of straw hats from Tuscany during the period from 1851 to 1856 was estimated in official statements, published at the time, at 13,200,9856. It cannot now be ascertained, because in the Custom House returns straw lasts are not distinguished from those made of other materials. Tuscany has no longer, as it had for a long time, the monopoly of this branch of industry, which is now carried on in various parts of Central, Northedm and Southern Italy, but the hats made there are of inferior quality, and not intended for exportation. The average annual value of the straw plaitings, &c., (not including hats) exported from italy is about 6,848,0307. An American recently demanded an exclusive

The Gazette de France inquires to whom is due the first idea of the Confederation of Northern Germany and declares that it is not to be attributed to Frederick the Great, as many suppose, but to Napoleon I it argues the cause in the following terms:—A dospatch dated from the Tulleries in July, 1806, and which is quoted by M. Thiers in his "History of the Consulate and the Empire," said, "The Emperor Napoleon will see without pain, and even with pleasure, Prussia range under her influence, by means of a confederation similar to that of the Rhine, all the States of Northern Germany. Without doubt his Majesty thea wished to detach Prussia from Austria and Russia, and avoid the campaign of 1807, by making her his accomplice and handing over to her all the North of Germany, on condition she should adher without reserve to the indirect absorption of Southern Germany by France.

A letter from Rome, of the 8th, says:—"This morning between seven and eight the Pope celebrated in his private oratory, in the Apostolical Palace, the marriage of Count di Gaserts with the daughter of Count de Trapani. Those prosent were very namerous; all the royal family of Naples. Francis II. at their head, a number of Neapolitan and Roman guests and many Bpaniards. His Holmess spoke a few words of exhortation to the youthful pair, and then everybody retired. A large sessuablage of Neapolitans were waiting on the Place Santo-Petro to see the bride and bridegroom come out, and when they made their appearance they were satuted with emphatic marks of respect and sympathy. At the present moment no one can possibly deny that hopes are dawning for the Neapolitan Bourbons. The people of the former kingdom of the Two Sicilies, wearied out with bad Italian.government, sigh for change, and would, on the first occasion, open their arms to Francis II. or to the republic—perhaps to both at the same time. The royal family of Naples is endeavoring now to extend its alliances by marriage; for on these it partly relies, and not without reason. Duke Robert of Parma is here for some days past, with the object of concluding a marriage between himself and the slater of Francis II. This arrangement, it is thought, will be carried out.
